Efma

16/10/2014 · The study conducted by A.T.

Kearney and Efma is designed as a snapshot of different approaches in the banking industry: describing how banks and non-banks are tackling digitization and sketching required capacities and skill sets to succeed. For this, in-depths interviews with leading practitioners globally will be conducted.

5/3/2015 · In the second joint study by A.T. Kearney and not-for-profit organisation Efma, the digitisation of retail banking across the globe is explored. The study is based on interviews conducted with more than 25 executives in charge of digital or multichannel in the retail banking divisions of 22 leading banks.

Global management consultancy firm A.T. Kearney wrote in a recent report that, for insurers, “The winning plans will define an overall path for each asset (car, home and self), allowing for differentiated approaches, the ability to be informed and adjust direction, and flexible investment and resource planning to navigate a new and evolving landscape.”

throughout the past year according to A.T. Kearney's FDI Confidence Index 2017. The Index indicates that the region has had a 19% fall in investor confidence throughout 2016-17.

A.T. Kearney advises to move beyond the first three actions in commoditized and saturated markets including insurance. On top of the commoditization challenge in many P&C insurance areas, there is also the easy replication of offerings and even innovations.
