This book argues that it is not so: the ARTS & ECONOMICS go well together, indeed need each other. Without a sound economic base, art cannot exist, and without creativity the economy cannot flourish. There is a second way in which the Arts and Economics go together, namely in the sense of applying economic thinking to the arts.

Although the all-pervasive interrelationships between education and culture are acknowledged, we will confine our attention in this chapter to three main areas where a specific role for cultural policy can be identified: arts education in schools; the education and training of artists; and education as a factor determining demand for artistic goods and services.
