Among Eckersley's students were groups of refugees from the Continent, including Walter Kaufmann, a Jewish German businessman with whom Eckersley became friends, and who was later to collaborate with him on several successful texts for business English: A Commercial Course for Foreign Students (Eckersley and Kaufmann 1947), English Commercial Practice and Correspondence (Eckersley and ...

A student can know all about English and yet be unable to follow an ordinary conversation between English people or speak half a dozen sentences as English people would say them. The people who only learn (or teach) about English make the mistake of regarding "English" as a "subject" (like geography or physics), which it is not, instead of as a "skill" or an "activity" like swimming or tennis ...
