The Algerian War began on 1 November 1954 and ended 8 years later, in 1962, following the in-dependence of Algeria. The conflict was a colonial war between France and the Algerian people, but it was also a civil war between loyalist Algerian Muslims who still believed in a French Algeria and their independence-minded Algerian counterparts.

27/8/2013 · This article examines perceptions of the Algerian war among French intellectuals and in mainstream French culture. Against the background of France's social and political situation in the 1950s – declining international prominence, the loss of its colonies, rapid industrial modernization, and increasing moves toward individualism – the essay discusses the reactions of left-leaning ...
