Using a relational framework as the fulcrum of analyses, it demonstrates that in Africa's economic integration processes, community-state, inter-state and inter-community legal relations have neither been carefully thought through nor situated on a solid legal framework, and that attempts made to provide legal framework have been incomplete and, sometimes, grounded on questionable assumptions.

The Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) became the champion of regional integration, already in the mid-1960s proposing the division of Africa into regions for the purposes of economic development. Current African integration arrangements can be divided into two broad groups: those that fit into the Lagos Plan of Action (LPA) adopted in April 1980, and those that were either in existence or came ...

Africa has a number of unique growth-retarding constraints including the continent's fragmentation into many small domestic markets coupled with low purchasing power, landlocked national economies often with insufficient access to major markets etc. Africa's leaders therefore quickly recognised the importance of regional integration as a tool to capture its own regional market; to exploit ...
