A code key is a key that is un-copied, an original key that is cut to very specific measurements. When a key is created, it is created using a code. The code determines the depth of the cuts made. When a key has been used too long, is damaged, or has been worn down, it may still unlock the doors, but eventually the key will either break, get stuck inside the lock (damaging the system), or it ...

3/8/2015 · On a standard house lock, the key code can sometimes be found on the lock or the key itself. That key code corresponds to a list that your locksmith will have, and it will tell them how to cut the key. Finding the key code for a vehicle is slightly different. Most often you or your locksmith will have to contact your dealer and use the car's vehicle identification number (VIN) to find the code. This code, in ...

Im not being a smart tail but if it was that easy anyone could get keys codes and steal trucks.They do not put key codes in your book either.The only place to get a key code for a Ford truck is Ford.Only thing you have to do is take the vin to the parts room and they have a book.They cut the keys by the books Ford gives them.Also the diesels dont have a theft system key. So if the locksmith ...

the low mess and no power is the appeal for a code machine for me too. Is there such a thing as a manual/no power code cutter? They all seem to work by grinding so I'm assuming not. Also from my understanding of the operation depth keys+duplicators seem like they might be more manual work even than using the finicky pak-a-punch.
