To belong is already to multiply belong. The Christian identity is a multiple religious identity. Though Pieris has not explicitly theorized multiple religious belonging, I have tried to show that his ample theological production is useful for interrogating two standing theories of it.

26/1/2017 · Abstract It is argued that the concept of Multiple Religious Belonging as normally conceived relies upon a problematic construction of “religion” which can be expressed as the World Religions Paradigm. This relies upon a modern Western Protestant bias as to how “religion” should be understood. It is argued that religion can be understood otherwise, ...
